Jason Swanson:

First, you have an internationally renowned doctor talking about Alzheimer's in our communities. I can't believe it; this is wonderful. I mean, years ago you would have to travel, probably to a lecture hall, and hear this and maybe even have to pay for this. Now he's coming out to us. He's talking to us! And it's phenomenal. It would be interesting to see what his first slide show was. I bet you that [in included] "there is no cure and we're years away from that cure." Wouldn't it be marvelous if at the last one, the 87th county he does, he's like, "We have a cure". What a slope. What a circle there, if you will. I don't know if that will happen. But just to see all the changes, how quickly things are evolving in the dementia world on a positive note. You would think it's pretty cool.
